MAKING AN ENTRANCE

A dining room table ready to seat eight is situated in a fully windowed alcove adjacent to the kitchen provides a direct view of the home's coastal setting.

The kitchen features different hues of white for the cabinets, countertops and ceiling. This allows the large pendant fixtures to attract attention.

"I like to fuse different elements together. In this case, it allows for reinvention and reinterpretation of the coastal aesthetic into something fresh and modern," said Jimenez SireDesign.com

HATS OFF

Raymond Jimenez's interior design firm Raymond Nicolas has launched a limited-edition capsule collection of lids inspired by vintage 1980s and 1990s Formula One Grand Prix racing podium hats.

This is his first foray into men's streetwear accessories. And as a real limited-edition collection each hat is numbered. $115, RaymondNicolas.com

MADE HER
MARK

Interior designer Jackie Armour is celebrating her company's silver anniversary, but it is her bold and creative use of color from which she has made her mark in the interior design industry.

A colorful patterned wallpaper is one of Jackie Armour's design signatures. "My sweetspot is color and pattern," she said.

Interior designer Jackie Armour believes a good designer must be versatile.

Under Armour's tutelage her team at JMA Interior Design understands the power of the palette and how to use a mix of color and pattern to push the envelope with great style and finesse.

But when starting a new design project, it is the textiles that serve as Armour's inspiration.

"Many designers start with the artwork, but I always start with the textiles," she said.

"My sweet spot is when a project allows me to move in a direction where I can use color and pattern as the drivers of the project."

Over her career, Armour has established an instinctual understanding of color. "Colors are either warm or cool, so pairing them in similar temperatures always results in harmonious combinations," she said.

In addition to her use of bold hues and dramatic patterns, Armour's extensive experience working directly with builders, architects and contractors, skills for space planning and interior design and eye for the architectural details has allowed her to become a sought-after designer who has the talent to create award worthy interiors with the perfect balance of form and function.

So, in honor of her 25th anniversary as an interior designer, Armour shares her top 10 form and function principles that guarantee the design of beautiful spaces.

When color is used well it can work anywhere including on a home's front door. "People are getting much more comfortable using color," said Armour.

Armour loves a white kitchen but uses color to add some pizzazz.

3 Blending the old with the new makes a space feel layered. The old and new belong together. The mix of modern/contemporary furnishings with antiques never gets old.

4 If someone entertains a lot, the home must have a great bar.

5 Think of the ceiling as the fifth wall. Ceilings define the lines and beauty of a space. Whether in lush lacquer, with real or faux wooden beams or wallpaper, the ceiling offers a great way to add the wow factor.

1 The most important aspect of good design is to have a good floorplan.

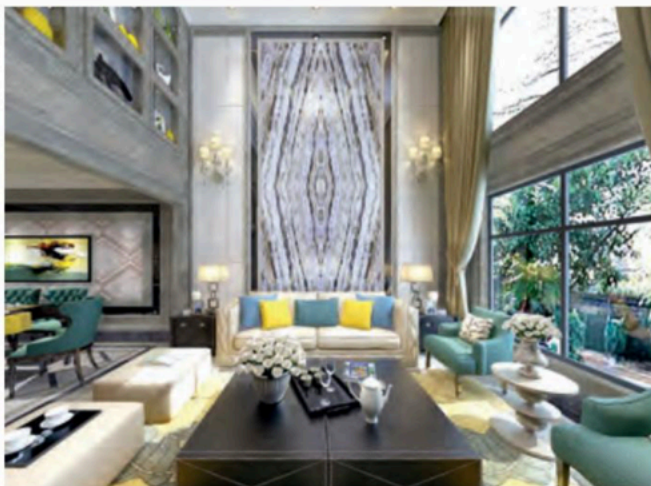

2 Whatever the design, selecting the right color is a priority. There is tremendous power in color. It grabs the attention. It plays a vital role in design. It can draw the eye to a specific place in a space. Color often triggers feelings and certain hues can evoke specific emotional responses.

The dining room has pink faux-silk linen covering the chairs with lucite legs and antique brass details. They are paired with a contemporary glass table. The backdrop of the built-in was painted lime green to add some drama. The Visual Comfort chandelier is antique brass with crystals made to look like feathers.
